DEPARTMENT OF TELUGU

(b) Aim of Teaching Language:

The History of language is as ancient as human evolution itself is. Though preliminary cavemen were using the language aided by many physical gestures and body language basically to communicate with each other/one another for pure basic needs such as hunger thirst shelter, security etc. Gradually its evolutionary development made knowledge transfer possible and that distinguished the human race in quite a sustained superior way than other intelligent animals. By establishing a clear relationship between sounds and objects, language progressed from verbal to script and from there to grammar and to a structured and complicated way, where the expression can uniquely be expressed. In fact, the degree of progress of any language can be associated with and identified as degree of civilization of the society concerned. Literature is the product of a language and compulsive necessity of human beings to express and share their creative ideas. Though initially the literature was through songs/folk dances and such other forms gradually it evolved to a superior stage and the written forms, scripts were handed over to the next generations and thus helped for sustained and refined development process from generation to generation. Now information is being stored through various sources including electronic chips. Whatever may be the degree of development now at accumulating literary heritage, the human script behind all this creative activity, be it poetry that takes first plays in Fine Arts or Prose that was written keeping in view for transfer of values and ethics is as old and as strong as that of our ancient human being whose will to survive made us now to enjoy the life. This background makes literature more interesting to pursue a career and serves as an aid in study of other faculties as literature carries the fragrance of history the prevalent culture at that time and many such other clues

Considering such importance that the literature and language possess the UGC and other educational bodies gave at par priority to them with science and technology. The Department of Telugu offers six compulsory papers I,II (General) ,III and IV Spl.Telugu.

Contents of the papers as under :

1. Old Poetry
